The College of Environmental Design (CED) is defined by the motivation and drive of our diverse and talented students. CED undergraduate and graduate students are known for their innovation, intelligence, commitment and desire to make a difference in people’s lives through environmental design.

CED students are eager to enhance their education with practical hands on experience in firms, corporations, nonprofits, and government agencies. The CED On-SITE Internship Program encourages practical work experience by streamlining student access to internships while also supporting their academic progress with much needed scholarships.

On-SITE is designed to:

- introduce organizations to some of the brightest, most determined, and innovative environmental design students soon to enter the market;
- provide students with practical experience that can only be obtained in a professional work environment; and
- support students in their education by awarding scholarships.

Participating organizations are required to provide (1) a paid summer internship position to an undergraduate or graduate student enrolled at CED and (2) an additional $2,500 scholarship established with CED to be directed to the student after completion of their internship.

We encourage a multiple year commitment to the program to benefit from the word-of-mouth and momentum gained from previous interns sharing their positive experience. A three-year commitment of $7,500 payable over a three-year period is preferred.

BENEFITS

- CED will widely publicize and market your internship within the College to assure that the best possible candidates apply.
- Each Department will have a faculty committee to screen student applicants and advance top candidates for your consideration.
- Your scholarship contribution is tax deductible.
- Your organization will directly support public higher education and the environmental design professions.
