The Department of Architecture of the University of California, Berkeley is conducting an international search for a full-time position in Design at rank of Assistant Professor, tenure-track, or Associate Professor / Professor with tenure with an expected start date of July 1, 2018.

The Department of Architecture seeks a candidate who has demonstrated a strong record, or emerging potential, of recognized design accomplishment through creative work, including built work and theoretical explorations, scholarship and/or research, grants, publications, awards, and exhibitions. Work that is breaking new ground in addressing architecture as a cultural endeavor that engages under-represented constituents and geographies and expertise grounded in issues of social justice, inequality, race, poverty, and privilege would be highly valued.

The position involves teaching core and advanced studios in the undergraduate and graduate programs, as well as seminar and lecture courses in the candidate’s area of research. Beyond a primary role in teaching studio, as well as seminar and lecture roles in architectural design, additional duties generally include advising students in our undergraduate and graduate programs, as well as service to the department, college, university, and the greater community. Department faculty are expected to produce creative research at the highest level, contributing to national and international scholarship and debate. The Department is particularly interested in designers with experience working with diverse and underserved students and/or communities and who have demonstrated their commitment to improving access to higher education for disadvantaged students.

Reflecting the ethos of the College of Environmental Design, we are committed to attracting talented students who come from diverse backgrounds, cultures, experiences and perspectives. We strive to cultivate an inclusive environment for our students and faculty that respects and reflects the wider community in which we live and work. This position will build on the Department of Architecture’s rich history in the critical examination of race and ethnicity, gender and sexual orientation, power and privilege, poverty and inequality, restorative justice, and other aspects of human identity and relations within the built environment. Our faculty and students create opportunities for action and the implementation of theory into practice.

Basic Qualification: Applicants must hold a Master of Architecture (M.Arch) degree (or equivalent degree) at time of application. We are seeking candidates with experience in university teaching and recognition and/or promise of future recognition for design, professional practice, and/or published research.
